

COMMENT OF
THE DAY

Taipei's "Awkward Complication"

AN "awkward complication" (as the Foreign Office puts it) has arisen over Taipei's threat to veto the entry of Outer Mongolia into the United Nations. Many other nations, anxious to end the eight-year deadlock over the admission of new members, are far more caustic in their criticism of the Nationalists' intention. Even President Eisenhower, who has no burning desire to see any of the five Communist candidates—and least of all Outer Mongolia—admitted, has sent two anxious appeals to President Chiang Kai-shek to reconsider his plans.

It is tempting to believe that the threat to use the veto is a bluff, and that the Nationalists would not dare pursue this dangerous course in the face of growing opposition to their presence in both the Assembly and the Security Council. No country is more aware of this opposition than the Nationalists themselves. Their political objection to the candidacy of Outer Mongolia is a convenient guise for a fear that the admission of at least ten of the 18 proposed members will jeopardise its own prospects of longevity in the UN.

TAIPEI sees Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland and Nepal as potential opponents together with the five Communist members. There is no certainty either that Japan or Italy would care to commit themselves on this issue. And the Nationalists also have to contend with an increasing swing in favour of Communist China's admission which may well unseat them at the next Assembly vote on this question in 1956.

But if the Nationalists did apply the veto, far from ensuring them a permanent seat, they would almost certainly alienate what little sympathy they still manage to command. Two weeks ago, the Nationalists shared their objection to Outer Mongolia with America and France who also opposed a number of other anti-colonial nations in the list of 18 candidates.

BUT as the list included some obviously desirable candidates and their admission was proposed in a "package" form (which means that a rejection of one would amount to a rejection of all) America and France wisely rationalised and agreed to accept the less desirable goats with the sheep.

Thus Taipei has been driven into isolation. Its future in the United Nations now lies in its own hands. By permitting Outer Mongolia's admission, Chiang Kai-shek may postpone the inevitable. But it is doubtful whether he will gain many new friends in the process. The other alternative is to "go down fighting" and hasten the Nationalists' demise. But in either event, Taipei is confronted with a choice of means. Whatever its final decision it has little chance of remaining in the United Nations as the representative of China for very much longer.

Obviously its best course would be to preserve existing friendships. The fate of the Nationalists and the future of Formosa are obviously bound up with a settlement between Washington and Peking and it would be wise to make sure of equality in the time of need that is approaching.

DISSOLUTION DECISION

France To Hold Elections
JANUARY 8 IS LIKELY DATE
Cabinet Split

Paris, Nov. 30. The French Government of Premier Edgar Faure tonight decided to dissolve the National Assembly and proclaim new elections. The decision, which puts the Constitution's dissolution machinery into effect for the first time in the life of the Fourth Republic, was taken after a three and a half hours' Cabinet meeting tonight, under President Rene Coty, which followed an Assembly vote of no confidence in the Government yesterday.

The Cabinet decision split Faure's own Radical-Socialist Party. Five of the nine Radical Ministers said after the session that they refused to go along with the decision. They will hold a meeting tomorrow.

Informal sources said that President Coty would delay issuing the dissolution proclamation so that the new general elections could take place after New Year's Day.

As immediate dissolution would mean elections on Christmas or New Year's Day, since the Constitution provides that voting must be held between 20 and 30 days after the proclamation, and the present election law calls for voting on a Sunday.

The Assembly's nominal five-year term would have been up next June.

The nation will go to the polls under the much-criticised system used in the last general elections in 1951.

Bitter Election Campaign
Is Anticipated

Paris, Dec. 1. France's politicians were today preparing for the bitterest election campaign since 1936 when an alliance of Communists, Socialists and centre party Radicals produced a parliament dominated by the Popular Front.

The Premier's decision to give in to the pleas of the Popular Republican (Catholics) and Conservative members of his government and to agree to dissolve the Assembly within the next few days and hold new general elections, caused consternation among a considerable section of the present Assembly.

Although the government last night acted strictly in accordance with the provisions of the constitution, deputies in all parties felt that the government might well have scored a pyrrhic victory.—Reuter.

This system provides for proportional representation and permits pre-electoral alliances enabling parties to pool their voting strength. The alliances have come under sharp fire for producing an unfair distribution of seats as compared with the distribution of the popular vote in the various constituencies.

THE DISSIDENTS
The five dissenting Radical Cabinet members were: Interior Minister Maurice Bourges—Meunoury, Education Minister Jean Berthoin, Trade Minister Andre Morice, Defence Under-Secretary Henri Lafont, and Finance Under-Secretary Gilbert Jules.

Premier Faure told newsmen after the Cabinet session that he had considered it necessary to put into force the constitutional provisions for dissolution to prevent them from falling into "disuse".

The Constitution authorises dissolution if two governments are overthrown by an absolute majority of the Assembly within an 18-month period. The defeat of the Faure Government by an absolute majority of 318 to 218 followed that of Premier Mendes-France last February 5.

FAURE'S REGRET
Faure told the press that he regretted that no change in the election system had been possible.

He noted that the Assembly had approved his early-election plan twice and that he had proposed an additional delay to alter the election system, but he said "the opposition" had overruled his proposal and toppled his government.

PERJURY TRIAL

Parson Was Not Promised
Immunity
Says Witness

London, Nov. 30. A police officer denied in court here today that an 88-year-old retired parson who has admitted committing perjury was told he would not be prosecuted.

The parson, the Rev Basil Andrews, is star prosecution witness in the trial of Mrs Margaret Comer, wife of self-confessed gangster Jack (Spot) Comer, and three of Comer's friends, Morris Goldstein, 43, Peter McDonough, 45, and Bernard Shack, 53.

All are on trial at the Old Bailey, Central Criminal Court here, charged with recruiting the retired clergyman to testify that he saw a daylight knife fight between Jack Comer and another man named Albert Dimes.

Andrews' evidence helped to get Comer acquitted, though he has since confessed that it was a "pack of lies." Dimes was also acquitted and a public outcry arose because no one was punished for the alibi.

At today's hearing the third day of the trial, Detective Superintendent Herbert Sparks said that neither he nor anyone in his presence had ever indicated to Andrews that he would not be prosecuted.

Andrews, who underwent grueling cross examination at earlier sittings, has said that he was bribed to give false evidence at Jack Comer's trial. Superintendent Sparks came under close cross examination in the witness box today when he told the court about statements alleged to have been made by each of the accused men.

OPENED DRAWERS

Questioned about a visit to Goldstein's home on October 20, Superintendent Sparks agreed he opened drawers and took out papers and photographs.

Asked by Mr David Weitzman, Goldstein's counsel, whether he had any right to open drawers and remove documents, the detective replied: "I was arresting this man and I thought it in the interests of justice to take anything that might be relevant."

The detective told the court earlier he was "surprised" about the result of the Jack Comer and Albert Dimes affair.

He agreed that a press outcry followed, demanding an inquiry. "Articles were written to that effect but the police do not bother about articles in the press."

In replying to Mr A. P. Marshall, counsel for Mrs Comer, Superintendent Sparks agreed that she had not been in any sort of trouble before.

The trial was adjourned until tomorrow, when the prosecution's case was expected to end and the defence begin.—China Mail Special.

LORD JOHN HOPE

TRADING COUNCIL A
COMMUNIST FRONT
SAYS GOVERNMENT

London, Nov. 30. Lord John Hope, Joint Under-Secretary of the Foreign Office, reiterated in the Commons today the government's belief that the British Council for the Promotion of International Trade was a Communist front organisation. He added that HMG were continuing to recommend exporters should not associate themselves with the organisation.

"The decision whether to use its services must be left to the patriotic judgment of each firm or individual," Lord Hope stated, adding, "I am confident those concerned will prefer to use the many alternative and reputable channels which exist for the conduct of legitimate trade with the Soviet bloc countries."

UN PACKAGE DEAL
RESOLUTION MOVE

New York, Nov. 30. Mr Paul Martin, Canadian Deputy Foreign Minister, will introduce a 27-country resolution in the United Nations General Assembly's special political committee tomorrow calling on the Security Council to consider forthwith the applications of 18 states—including Japan—for admission to the world organization.

Today Mr Martin told correspondents that he was as sanguine as ever of a successful outcome of the long-deadlocked membership issue despite the Chinese Nationalist threat to veto the admission of Outer Mongolia which would endanger the whole "package deal."

He made this statement after a 30-minute meeting with the other sponsors, Ethiopia and Chile today joined the original 23 countries backing the resolution on which Canada has been working right from the start of this session of the Assembly.

Mr Martin was seeing Mr Vasily Kuznetsov, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister, and some of the other big power delegates today. The Soviet Union, with Britain and the United States is prepared to accept the admission of all the 18 countries which have asked to join.

France has not yet made her position known but is expected to agree with Britain in acquiescing to the admission of Outer Mongolia. Britain and the United States have both stated that they believe the issue should be dealt with in the Security Council—where the Big Five permanent members have the right of veto—before any General Assembly discussion, but Canada and the other sponsors want the Assembly to have an opportunity of stating its views first.

Any applicant for membership must be approved by seven votes of the 11-nation Security Council in which all the five permanent members have the right of veto.—Reuter.

WEATHER NEWS:

In New York State—
6 Feet Of Snow

Chicago, Nov. 30. Heavy snows joined forces today with the worst cold wave of the season in the United States. Northern Michigan and western New York state were covered by up to six feet of snow, sub-freezing temperatures drove as far south as Florida, and vicious weather was blamed for at least 39 deaths across the nation.

Heart attacks or traffic accidents caused by the wintry blizzards accounted for 14 deaths, and 19 persons died in fires, most of them caused by overheated stoves. In addition, six junior college students were killed when their car smashed into the side of a speeding train during a dense fog near Hanford, California.

BIGGEST EVER

There were at least five dead at Buffalo, New York, when the biggest one-day November snowstorm in the city's history brought the community's life practically to a halt yesterday. The snow was officially measured at 19.9 inches, but some suburbs reported four feet and hundreds of motorists were marooned in drift-stalled cars.

Drifts six feet deep were reported in Michigan's upper peninsula and the city of Kalamazoo was buried under a 14-inch snowfall. The storm was blamed for at least three deaths. In such wintry cities as International Falls, Minn., and Ironwood, Mich., meanwhile, the snow had long ceased to be a novelty. International Falls has

In England—
Heavy Fog

London, Nov. 30. Fog brought complete darkness to central London by mid-afternoon today, and also disrupted transport in central, southern and south-west London.

Early tonight automobile associations reported that the fog had affected 20 counties and covered 11,000 square miles.

Train and bus services were disrupted, shipping halted and road traffic reduced to a crawl. London airport was forced to divert incoming planes to Hurn airport near Bournemouth, except during one 60-minute "clear" period. Outgoing services were unaffected.

On the river Thames only a few barges were able to move. All other shipping was forced to a standstill.

Long lines of vessels were forced to anchor in the Thames estuary, including the 23,700-ton Strathnaver, which left Tilbury overnight with 1,000 passengers for Australia. China Mail Special.

RADIO &
TV BAN

Commons Adopts
Govt Motion

London, Nov. 30. The House of Commons tonight approved a government ban on radio and television discussions of any topic after it has been ruled an issue for parliamentary debate. At present the ban operates for 14 days.

A government motion—insisting on the much criticised ban—was submitted with a proviso that a parliamentary committee should be set up to inquire whether present arrangements should be changed. The government motion was approved without a vote.

The 14-day rule has been strongly criticised in the press and by some politicians as a danger to the freedom of speech. These critics want either the rule to be abolished or the period of 14 days reduced.

AMENDMENT

A Labour member, Mr Desmond Donnelly, moved an amendment approving the appointment of the inquiry committee but not agreeing in advance to the principle of limitation.

This was defeated by 271 votes to 128 in a "free vote" where members voted how they pleased irrespective of party lines.

Mr Clement Attlee, leader of the Labour opposition, joined the chief government speaker in support of the ban.

"Parliament must be kept as the great forum of democracy—a position it has held for so many years," he declared. "He feared that if the ban was not enforced, the BBC might come to have views of its own and might become an instrument of government."

Mr Attlee contended that there was no comparison with the press because the press had a number of voices.

PROTECTIVE RULE

Dr Charles Hill, the Postmaster-General, who is partly responsible to parliament for the BBC and the recently created Commercial Independent Television Authority, said: "The rule was designed to protect the public when parliament was debating an important issue from having views on the issue thrust upon them by a few people sometimes unrepresentative and sometimes not fully informed."

Lord Hope described Mr Wilson's statement as misleading and said "For their own sakes the sooner his reputation for getting out of it (the Council) the better."

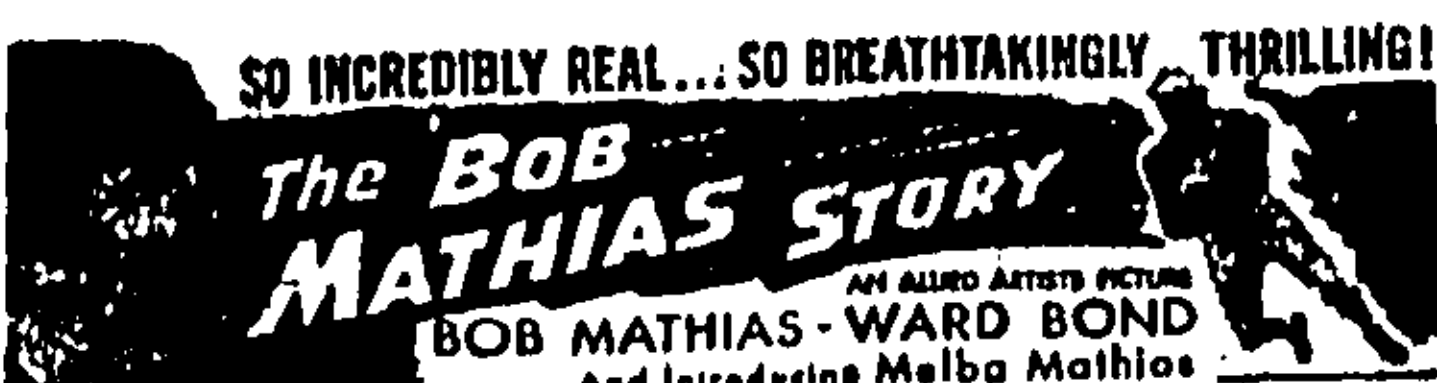

When pressed by another Socialist to give evidence to justify the "sweeping and completely inaccurate statement" he had made, Lord Hope made no further reply.—London Express Service.

Dr Hill suggested a rule might be adopted to limit broadcast discussion only in respect of business announced by the leader of the House (on Thursday) for the following week.—Reuter.

Peron's Party Dissolved

LA PRENSA GIVEN BACK TO OWNERS

Buenos Aires, Nov. 30

The Argentine Government today ordered the dissolution of the Peronista Party and restored to its former owners the famous newspaper La Prensa, seized by the Peronista Party in 1951.

It issued a decree dissolving both the men's and women's sections of the party, which ex-President Juan Peron built up to overwhelming dominance in the nation's life, and provided for its assets to be administered by the Government.

Neo-Destour Rival Groups In Fight

Tunis, Nov. 30.

Incidents occurred today in the Cape Bon area of Northeast Tunisia between rival groups in the Neo-Destour (Tunisian Nationalists) Party.

As the former Secretary-General of the Neo-Destour, Salah ben Youssef, had announced his intention of visiting the town of Menzel Bou Zelfa, local supporters decided to build a welcome platform.

On the road from Tunis to Menzel Bou Zelfa, near Soliman, Bourguibists barred the road to Youssefists and three people were wounded when firing broke out. The Youssefist headquarters in Soliman were also set on fire—France-Press.

Lightning Strikes Presidential Apts

Buenos Aires, Nov. 30.

Lightning struck the Casa Rosada during a heavy thunderstorm today, cutting some telephone lines in the Presidential apartments.

The bolt hit while the Japanese Ambassador, Takajiro Indue, was presenting his credentials to Provisional President Pedro Aramburu. There were no casualties.

The storm, accompanied by torrential rains, broke up a six-day record heat wave.—United Press.

Girl's Escapade

Melbourne, Nov. 30.

A young woman appeared in court here today and admitted riding through Melbourne streets early today clad only in flimsy underwear and a brassiere while standing on the shoulders of a motor-cyclist.

Evadne Casar, 25, pleaded guilty to a charge of offensive behaviour, but after hearing evidence the magistrate, Mr Harold Mohr, dismissed the charge with the comment: "There can't be one law for the beach and one for the street."—China Mail Special.

The decree followed government moves against the main economic bulwark of Peron's power, the General Confederation of Labour, which called an abortive strike the day after President Pedro Aramburu took over from Peron's successor, General Eduardo Lonardi.

It said the anti-Peron revolution led by General Lonardi, who was deposed by the army for being too conciliatory towards the Peronists, was aimed at "true democracy and true freedom in accordance with Western ideals."

Dictatorship

The Peronista Party had "violated all juridical forms established in the republic with regard to political parties and through unconditional serving a totalitarian dictatorship consistently violated the constitution," it said.

The decree accused the party of "the suppression of political life in the country, the suppression of all individual rights proclaimed by the constitution... the suppression of the federal system, and the declaration of a state of internal war which gave the police extraordinary powers."

It said the party had through congressional action placed all its members at the dictator's service, pooled its assets with those of the state, and made membership compulsory for public employees.

The Peronists "went to the most extreme forms of glorification, submission and reverence towards the deposed dictator and his late wife, who was proclaimed spiritual leader of the nation," it said.

Expropriated Assets

The decree also said that through congressional action the party had curtailed the freedom of the press. Congress expropriated the assets of La Prensa, the only newspaper which retained its right to criticize the government, in 1951.

Its restoration to the family of Dr. Alberto Ginzburg Paz through government decrees today, comes just 24 hours before Dr Paz himself is due to return to the United States, where he fled when the Peronist Congress ordered his arrest.—Reuter.

RED CHALLENGE TO COMMONWEALTH Kremlin Leaders' Indian Tour

London, Nov. 30.

Lord Listowel said in the House of Lords tonight that the Russian leaders' tour of India was one of the most intensive propaganda campaigns ever undertaken.

The former Secretary of State for India added: "It is very clear that most of the Indian press resent the abuse of Indian hospitality which has been used as a platform for attacking the West."

"The majority of Indians have no standards by which to judge the veracity of the Russian words, such as the charge that we wanted war and started the last one."

"The really shocking charge that the Government was responsible for the launching of Hitler's Panzers against Russia is without foundation. The fact that these leaders are vouching for by Pandit Nehru with I fear, tend to stifle doubts that would otherwise rise in the minds of many.

Time For Reflection

"Everyone must hope that, after the garlands have faded and there is time for reflection, it will be no more than transient. But the impact will not be counteracted by simply ensuring that truth prevails."

Lord Listowel said: "We must show by our actions that the Commonwealth democracies are better and more interested friends of India than the Communist states."

"The Commonwealth and its fellow democracies were facing a challenge for the future of Africa as well as India."

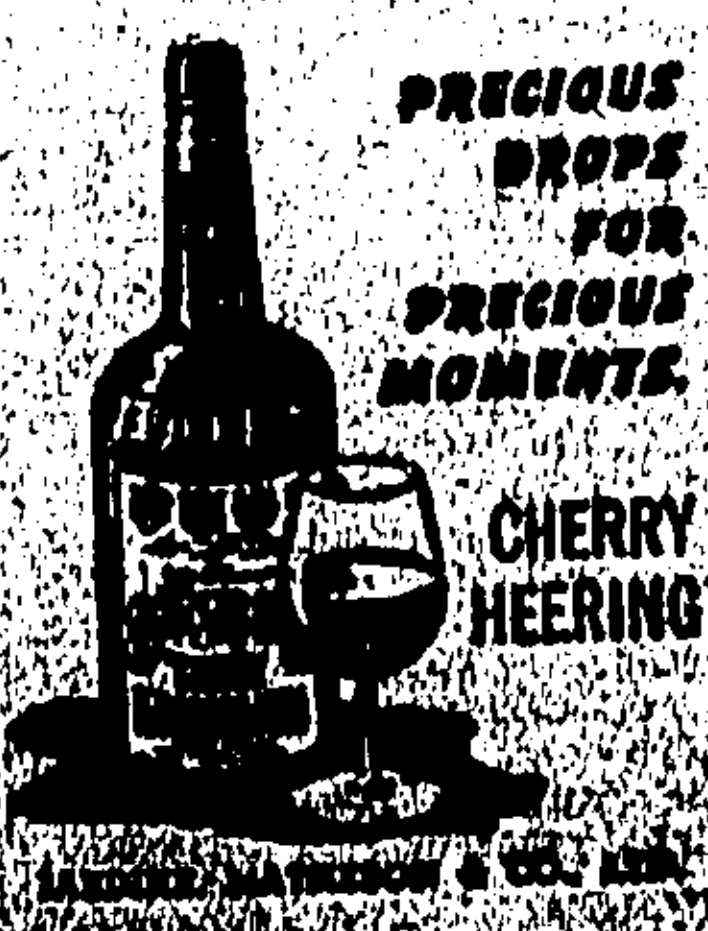

"The Commonwealth should keep the initiative it took in launching the Colombo Plan by starting a similar campaign against poverty and backwardness in Africa."

Development Debate

The former Labour Minister was speaking during a debate on Commonwealth development.

The Earl of Home, Commonwealth Relations Secretary, who replied commented "The Indians will have to make up their minds where the true value lies, and where their allegiance lies. They will find that independence is not just a name: To retain it demands vigilance and unless it is nourished it is lost."—France-Press.

★ CHANGED STATUS OF EAST BERLIN ★

Western Powers Must Act Quickly

SOVIET VIOLATION OF AGREEMENT

Berlin, Nov. 30.

The West Berlin City Government declared after an emergency meeting tonight that it expected the British, French and United States governments to take immediate steps in Moscow to prevent a change in the four power status of Berlin.

It protested against yesterday's Soviet statement that East Berlin is the capital of East Germany and no longer an occupied sector of Berlin.

The declaration called this an attempt to break the Soviet occupation pact from the whole of Berlin.

Britain, the United States, France and Russia each have a sector of Berlin under their control. An agreement reached at the end of the war, 1945, divided the city into four sectors. The 48 miles of Communist East German territory separate the Western sectors of Berlin from West Germany.

Tonight's declaration said the City Government considered the Soviet statement a "violation of the four power status of Berlin."

Trial Balloon

After the meeting, Dr. Otto Suhr, the Mayor, said that the Soviet statement was a "trial balloon" to see how the West would react.

He believed firmly that if the Western powers react more energetically than they did in other cases of trial balloons, such as the Berlin road toll, the Soviet Government would take no steps to change the status and safety guarantees of all four powers for Berlin.

"In my view the consequences of the Soviet communiqué's statement will depend entirely on the way the Western powers react," he said.

The Soviet statement came when United States authorities protested over the location of a Soviet military base in the Soviet sector of Berlin last week. It was the first time the use of radio-telephone in their car was against East German laws.

Western Discussion

The three Western deputy commanders in Berlin met today to discuss yesterday's Soviet statement.

The commanders of the three Western embassies in Bonn also met today to discuss the statement.

Responsible Western officials in Berlin believe the Soviet idea is to probe Western determination to remain in Berlin, and to pave the way for renewed efforts to edge the West into de facto recognition of the East German Communist regime.

Few senior officials believe the Russians intend at once to push the declaration to its logical conclusion—making the East-West sector boundary in Berlin into a state border and seriously challenging the West's rights in Berlin.

'Serious Situation'

But they say that unless the West makes it clear directly to Moscow that it will not recognise any one-sided Soviet repudiation of Berlin's four power status, the Russians will be encouraged to try to chase them out of West Berlin.

East Berlin newspapers today indicated that the long-term Communist aim is to take over the entire city, which is entirely surrounded by East German territory.

They published a letter from the East Berlin Communist party executive to the East Berlin City Council saying "the West sectors of Berlin remain a NATO military base under an occupation statute and under the dictatorship of reactionary big capital."

The United States Embassy in Bonn announced tonight that Dr. James Conant, the American Ambassador, would discuss the resulting "serious situation" with Dr. Suhr in Bonn tomorrow.

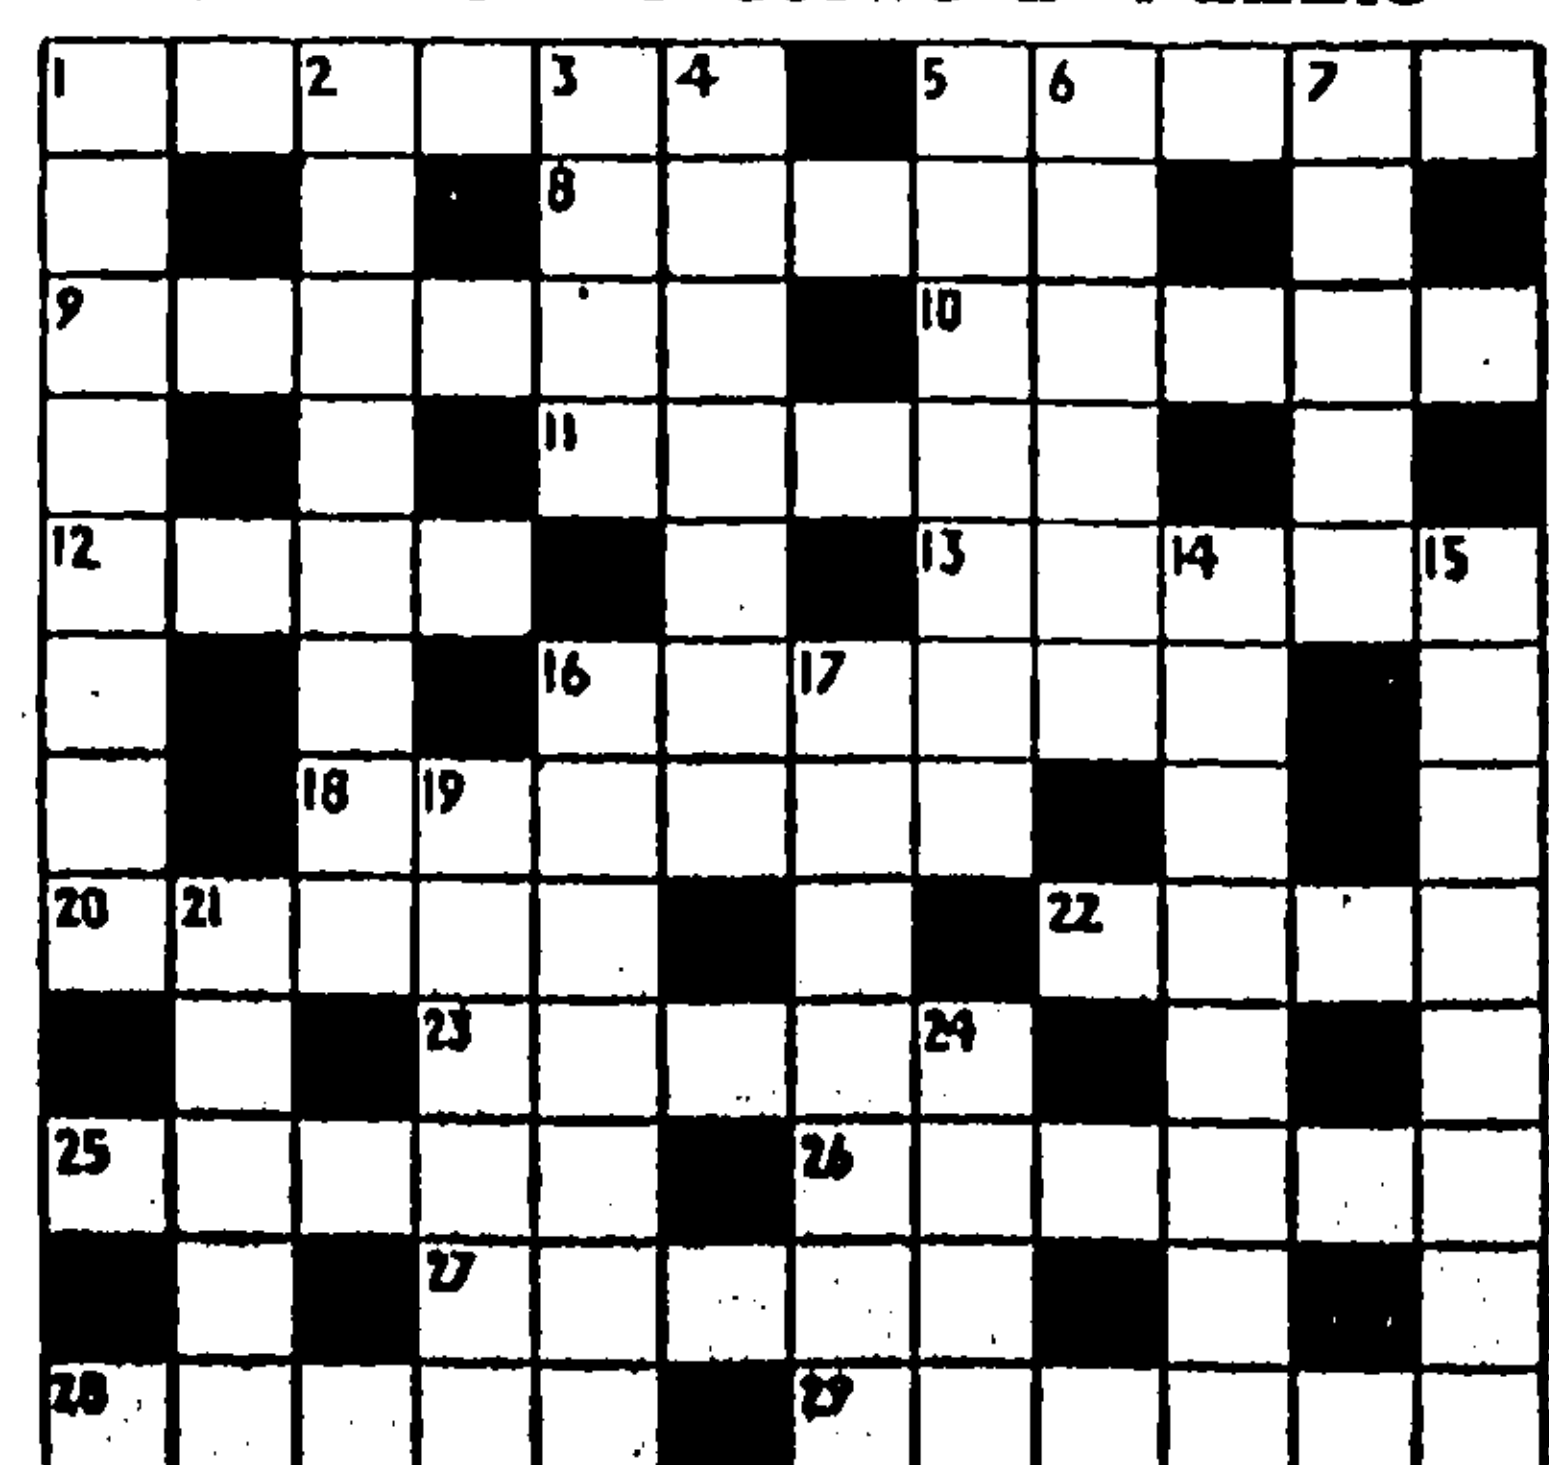

Paradoxes

The Embassy statement added: "In the meantime consultations with the British and French embassies are proceeding in regard to the serious situation arising from the recent incidents in Berlin, and Washington is being kept informed."

Western officials say the Soviet communiqué's statement reveals a number of paradoxes, including an apparent flouting of East German law by him, without even consulting the East German Government.

They asked why, if East Berlin was part of a sovereign republic, General Dlabova was still "commandant" and why he had agreed that American military cars there could transmit brief "emergency" calls if the law said they could not have radio-telephone apparatus.—Reuters.

Island Isolation For Card Sharps

Athens, Nov. 30. The Greek authorities, frustrated by an ancient law which enabled card sharps to go unpunished, have solved the problem by deporting offenders as undesirable to a remote island where there are no rich tourists to rescue.

An old law says that restitution protects a cheat from punishment. Card sharps took advantage of this by following their victims and immediately refunding their losses if they complained to the police.—China Mail Special.

Nepal May Restrict Climbers To Safety Zones

Kathmandu, Nov. 30. The Nepal Foreign Office is considering the formation of a stricter regulations for all Himalayan expeditions following reports that two Welsh mountaineers and a Nepalese laborer officer have been arrested by Chinese frontier guards. It was learned here today.

Although there was no official information on these stricter regulations, it was understood that expeditions wishing to operate in the China-Nepal border area would have to remain in "safety zones" well within Nepalese territory. These zones would be designated by the Nepalese Foreign Ministry.

This, it was understood, would resemble the 20-mile belt operating along India's borders with China within which foreigners are not allowed.

The Foreign Ministry is also said to be considering a suggestion that future Himalayan expeditions should take out a life insurance policy on the Nepalese Government liaison officer who accompanies them.—Reuters.

Soviet Antarctic Expedition Leaves

By Sidney Weiland

Moscow, Nov. 30.

The first Soviet expedition to the Antarctic sailed today from the Baltic port of Kaliningrad, to raise a Soviet flag on the "white continent."

The party sailed aboard the 12,000-ton Soviet icebreaker Ob from the port which was formerly a German city. Aboard the ship are aircraft, tractors, amphibious vehicles, dogs, food and prefabricated huts.

With another party leaving next month, the Russians will set up three bases on Queen Mary Land, south of the Indian Ocean and ruled nominally by Australia. The bases will be manned until 1959.

The distinguished polar explorer, Dr. Mikhail Orlov, leads the expedition which is a contribution to the international geophysical year starting on July 1, 1957.

US-Australia Bases

Scientists of many nations will then carry out world-wide explorations and studies for the benefit of international science.

The United States and Australia will set up bases a few hundred miles on either side of the Soviet party.

Other nations will also take part in exploring the South Polar region.

The Ob expects to reach the Queen Mary coast in January, the Antarctic's "summer." A second ship, the icebreaker Lena, will sail with another group on December 15, and will bring the total strength of the expedition of up to 220 men.

They will establish their first base on the coast, called Mirny (peaceful) and later two more islands, one near the magnetic South Pole. It is planned to have the Ob carry out explorations in Antarctic waters after landing the party. She carries special under-water exploration devices.

Strategic Aspect

Soviet interest in the Antarctic is believed also to have a strategic aspect. The Soviet Army newspaper Red Star recently accused the United States of treating the Antarctic as a military objective and testing ground for new weapons.—Reuters.

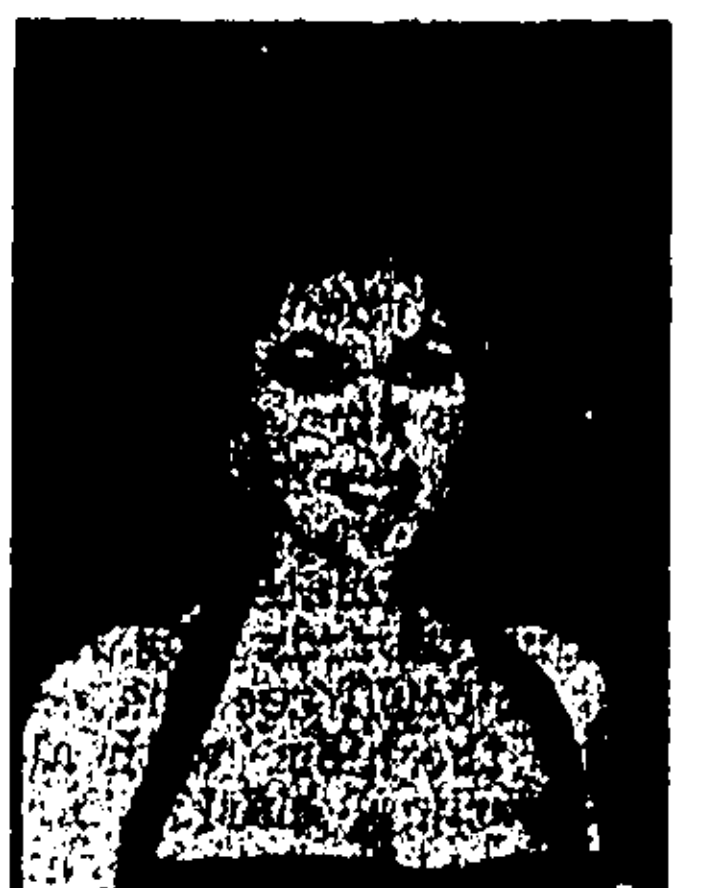

Tippling Fish Takes Daily Sip Of Wine

Madrid, Nov. 30. Seven thousand people visit the home of Senor Francisco Rolz at Villanueva de la Reina, a town in the south of Spain, to see a 15-year-old fish which eats out of his hand and takes a daily sip of wine.

The fish, a carp named Juanito, comes to the surface of its pond promptly at noon and sits verminally from its master's hand.

Then it waits patiently until, with a Spanish "porro" — a vessel for drinking wine without touching the jar — he pours a trickle of yellow fluid into the carp's open mouth.

Senor Rolz keeps the nature of the wine secret. In his words, "The fish would be ruined if it knew the secret."—China Mail Special.

LOLLO GETS HER COAT BACK

Paris, Nov. 30.

Gina Lollobrigida, glamorous Italian film star, left Paris today by car for a four-month rest in Italy, taking with her a precious $2,500 beaver coat, which had been temporarily impounded by the French customs service since its arrival from the United States.

Miss Lollobrigida, who was accompanied by her husband, Dr. Milko Skofic, has been shooting an American film "Trapeze" in Paris. She will return to France next year to make "Notre Dame de Paris" with Anthony Quinn.

Miss Lollobrigida went to only airport customs shed before leaving in order to take possession of the coat, which she had left there, rather than pay the customs duty for entry into France.

It was delivered to her under seal, and she was not permitted to examine it, and had to pay a deposit bond, refundable when she crosses the frontier into Italy.—France-Press.

Stone-Throwing Greek Ghost

Athens, Nov. 30.

Police have drawn a blank in a search for a ghost which throws stones at fishermen. Nikolaos and Gerassimos Botas, reported that the stone-throwing started when they tried to investigate after seeing the ghost.

Investigation failed to find any traces of the ghost. The fishermen, who have been fishing in the area, have been advised to be careful.—China Mail Special.

Congress Will Be Asked To Maintain Aid Level

Washington, Nov. 30.

The Administration will ask Congress next year to keep foreign aid spending near its present $2,700,000,000 level, officials reported today.

Administration leaders earlier had hoped to make a substantial election-year cut in foreign aid funds.

But Russia's tough tactics at the Geneva conference and Communist economic and military activity in the Middle East and South Asia appear likely to force an increase in spending in those areas. This expected increase may be met, however, by shifting aid funds from other areas instead of asking for big new appropriations.

Secretary of State John Foster Dulles and foreign aid chief John B. Hollister said yesterday in separate meetings with reporters that they do not see any world developments so far requiring a major increase in foreign military and economic aid. They both left the way open, however, for moderate aid increases or some shifting of aid funds.

Communist Targets

During the current fiscal year, $1,700,000,000 of United States funds are going to friendly countries for economic help. The rest is for military assistance. More than $1,000,000,000 in economic aid is going to Asian countries, and $29,000,000 to the Middle East and Africa.

These two general areas, now targets of Communist activity on an increasing scale, have received an estimated $1,500,000,000 in all kinds of aid from the United States since 1945. This includes money that was lost when the Nationalist Chinese Government was forced off the mainland.

Information made available to the United Press showed that the Russians and their satellites during this period have contributed relatively little to the same countries. But the upswing in Communist business deals and aid as such has been noticeable in these countries in the last year or so. For example:

EGYPT—Egypt is selling 60,000,000 tons of rice to Russia in exchange for 500,000 tons of crude oil. Cotton and additional rice from Egypt is moving in a three-corner deal with Russia and Rumania in exchange for 850,000 tons of Rumanian oil products.

Railroad Equipment

Egypt is buying railroad equipment from Communist Hungary. Russia has offered to help pay for the proposed Aswan Dam in Egypt in a deal that would be in the hundreds of millions of dollars all this in addition of course to the $80,000,000 Egyptian deal in the Communist bloc for arms.

INDIA—Russia has signed a deal to build a steel mill of an annual capacity of 1,000,000 tons. This is being financed by an initial credit of $90,000,000. India is getting sizable supplies from Russia of a general nature under a United Nations technical aid programme. Communist Hungary is working on a small copper wire plant in India. New deals are expected to follow the current visit of Soviet leaders to India and other South Asian countries.

AFGHANISTAN—Russians are now engaged in paving streets and roads in and near Kabul, the capital of Afghanistan. Soviet-built buses and taxis are making quite an impression in Kabul. The Russians are building grain warehouses and a flour mill. The Czechs are constructing a $5,000,000 cement plant which is reported in production.—United Press.

CENTRAL HEATING AS YOU WALK

Munich, Nov. 30. The Patents Office in Munich expects soon to register its millionth invention since patents were first recorded in Germany in 1877.

One of the strangest ideas in its files—registered in 1935—is "a contrivance in the heels of shoes, by which the individual's weight in walking can be utilized to heat the soles of the shoes."

The inventor suggested that a tiny dynamo in the heel would light a bulb to provide warmth, and a battery, worked by the action of walking, would circulate the heat through a tube embedded in the sole of the shoe. The inventor said he had made a model of the shoe.—China Mail Special.

RUSSIA LEGALISES ABORTIONS

By Henry Shapiro

Moscow, Nov. 30.

RUSSIA legalised abortions today in state medical institutions in an apparent attempt to make desirable planned parenthood. The decision reversed long-standing Soviet policy on the subject.

Today's action was a decree by the USSR Supreme Soviet repealing the anti-abortion law of 1930, and was the latest in a series of measures enacted since the death of Stalin reversing earlier policies and liberalising the Soviet Penal Code.

Russia gave two reasons today for making abortions in state medical institutions legal. One, it said, is that either married or unmarried women are entitled to planned parenthood. Birth control has always been legal.

Secondly, and most important, was the realistic consideration that the widespread illegal abortions which have been performed since 1930 have seriously impaired many women's health and caused many deaths.

Outlawed 1936

Until today, under prevailing legislation, abortions have been outlawed except for compelling medical reasons. A committee of physicians had to approve such operations. The outlawing of abortions in 1936 was preceded by a wide public debate.

The press then reported that within several weeks before the law was passed more than 12,000 suggestions, criticism, protests and demands flooded authorities. Many of them were from women's organisations opposing the ban.

Nevertheless, the law was passed unanimously. This correspondent was present at the Supreme Soviet when a woman member demanded the floor, turned towards the rostrum and said, "Thank you, Comrade Stalin, for this wise law against abortions."

The ban was one of a number of measures adopted then which were designed to strengthen the family and increase the birth rate. Free and easy divorce were later made impossible, common law marriages were abolished and liberal bonuses were offered to prolific mothers.

War Casualties

After the war, in spite of severe housing shortages and difficult economic conditions, large families were still encouraged and the Government subsidised unwed mothers.

The country also faced a serious problem then as a result of enormous war casualties, which caused a disproportion of women and men.

With millions of young men killed in the war, many women of the war generation faced a marriageless life. This was particularly noticeable when correspondents travelled through Russia after the war.

This correspondent, while touring through the formerly German-occupied and devastated areas of Byelorussia and the Ukraine immediately after hostilities ceased, saw whole villages inhabited only by women, old men and young boys.

Given Choice

In order to rebuild the population, large families were encouraged and the Government gave unwed mothers a choice of either keeping the children at home and accepting a subsidy or placing them in state institutions.

No stigma was attached to either unwed mother or children born out of wedlock.

The high birth-rate was maintained, with an annual increase in population of up to three and a half million, according to official statistics. The statistics apparently have been apparently changed.

With the rise of a new generation and the gradual reduction of the disproportion between men and women of marriageable age, Soviet authorities apparently now favour voluntary planned parenthood has become desirable.

Under the law now in effect, abortions are obtainable in state medical institutions. No questions will be asked. At the same time, educational facilities are being expanded with a wider dissemination of information on birth control, which always has been a part of Soviet policy.

PALESTINE ARAB REFUGEES

UN Committee Adopts Resolution

United Nations, Nov. 30.

The United Nations Special Political Committee today adopted a three-power resolution on Palestine Arab refugees despite objections from 14 Arab and Asian states.

The Soviet bloc joined the Arab-Asian group in abstaining from the vote, which was 38 to 0 in favour.

The US, Britain and Turkey sponsored the resolution, which recommends increased efforts to develop projects to make more of the Arab refugees self-supporting.

In the debate preceding the vote, the United States declared that nothing "new or sinister" could be attached to the recommendations of the resolution, which included mention of the long-debated Jordan valley and Sinai schemes.

Concern

The Abstentions of the Arab-Asian group underlined their expression of concern that the resolution might be interpreted as implying that the Government claim to repatriation in Israel.

US Ambassador James Wadsworth stated, however, that the resolution applied to all governments in the area without excluding any state, and that projects beyond the Jordan and Sinai schemes were also covered.—United Press.

SPORTSMEN SEEK NEW TARGET

Wellington, Nov. 30.

New Zealand sportsmen, who already have a fairly plentiful supply of duck, quail, pheasant and wild geese for their guns, are seeking a new target—one that will not eat the farmer's crops.

Wellington Acclimatisation Society suggested the import of a new game bird "which would not interfere with the economy of the country."

Another stipulation: It should be good to eat.—China Mail Special.

SOFT-FOOTED FOOTBALL

Cairo, Nov. 30.

Relatives and friends of the patients were invited to watch the first football match ever played by an Egyptian mental asylum, team.

The director of the asylum, in the Cairo suburb of Abbassia, made only one condition — the players must wear rubber shoes.—China Mail Special.

Gentle Persuasion

Barcelona, Nov. 30.

Two men walked into a Barcelona flat and extracted money from Senor Maria Teresa Pons by smothering her furniture until she paid them to stop.

When she gave them 1,000 pesetas ($210), they poured benzene on a pile of brandy bottles and lit them.—China Mail Special.

COLD COMFORT VILLAGE

By David Laidlaw

EVERY week more and more people manage to make their way from behind the Iron Curtain. The experiences of many of them are as exciting as a film, but sometimes it is the refugees with the least dramatic escape stories whose evidence carries most conviction and drives home most clearly the kind of existence lived by the mass of their countrymen.

A recent undramatic fugitive was a young Russian girl of 19 called Anya. With the exception of a few months in 1951, she had spent her whole life in a small provincial town in a comparatively prosperous part of the USSR. What she had to say about this place is undoubtedly true of hundreds of similar towns throughout the Soviet Union.

"It is a mistake to talk of it as a town," she exclaimed passionately. "It is a wretched, comfortless village where people live like beggars. Everyone thinks only of himself, and mistrust is so great that one has to beware even of one's best friends."

This atmosphere is widespread in Communist countries, where disaster can strike a man overnight. When Anya was 14, her father, a government official, was arrested, sentenced to 25 years' imprisonment and deported to Siberia, leaving her mother and herself penniless. The mother went to work as a charwoman, and Anya burnt her identity papers and passed herself off as 16 so that she too could apply for a job.

The town in which Anya lived was badly damaged during the war, and when she left it had not yet been rebuilt. The inhabitants, she said, had put up wooden shacks among the ruins, but the only solid new buildings were Party and municipal offices. This is typical of what has happened all over the Soviet Union. Everywhere the authorities have paid more attention to erecting "prestige" buildings than to providing decent accommodation for the mass of the people. Statistics show that the average amount of living space per person in Soviet cities is less than five square metres, and many families do not get even a room—let alone a flat—to themselves.

There is no doubt that Soviet insistence on collectivisation of agriculture (which the peasants hate) and on the priority of heavy industry has made daily life in the USSR for the majority of the population an affair of almost unrelieved austerity.

"One doesn't live," exclaimed Anya bitterly, "one vegetates. Life goes on monotonously from day to day and everyone is dejected and apathetic."

Better Past

She said that people kept hoping, however, that something might happen to improve their lot, and this hope was fostered by those who could still remember the town in its pre-Communist times. The older generation told stories about the past, and if anyone expressed disbelief they cited classical Russian literature to prove their point.

That descendants of the "oppressed classes" of the Tsarist era should prefer that period to the present is indeed an indictment of Communist society.

One "relic of the past" the Communists have always tried to destroy is religion. But apparently in Anya's town, it succeeded. In spite of everything, Anya affirmed, 90 percent of the population are deeply religious—not just the old people but the young ones too. Whatever they may do or say in public, in private they pray before the family ikon.

But every obstacle is put in the way of the outward observance of religious rites, and the one church in the town which survived the war has been turned into a bakery. In this bleak, constricted Communist world, the only people who have any chance of a reasonable existence are the new aristocracy—the Party members. In Anya's town, as everywhere else, these get the best jobs, houses, and educational opportunities.

A Little Scared

Their salaries, said Anya, are completely unrelated to those received by ordinary workers. For instance, whereas the average Soviet industrial wage is about 700 rubles a month, the local Party Secretary receives 3,000 rubles a month. In addition, Party members get four to six weeks' paid leave every year, and up to 12 months' fully-paid sick leave if necessary.

No wonder Anya was glad to get away. But she must have been a little scared, all the same. Until the Geneva Conference of the Heads of Government in July 1955, Communist propaganda consistently painted the Western world as a terrifying place. Anya admitted that her friends and relations had been frightened about her reception.

Some of them had prophesied that if she ever reached West Germany alive she would be flung into a forced labour camp and allowed to starve. Others went so far as to say that she would be hanged. And yet, she added, almost all her younger friends envied her the chance to risk these dangers.

Food and other necessities, said Anya, were equally scarce. There was a permanent shortage of every kind of foodstuff except bread, and it was impossible to get hold of winter clothing unless one had some kind of "pull" with the authorities.

This last is far from surprising when one realises the price of textiles in the USSR. To buy one yard of poor quality woolen coating material, Anya would have had to do 30 hours' work, as against the four or five hours required in most Western countries.

Although the official working day is one of eight hours, Anya's experience was that most people had to average at least 10 to 12 hours to earn enough money for the necessities of life. Although this naturally imposed a strain on their health, free medical treatment, she said, had been discontinued.

"Well, Billy's party is gettin' along real nice when in comes Sammy the Snatch and says to Billy: 'Billy,' he says, 'I brought you a magnificent set of seat covers which I find attached to some geezer's automobile outside.' Now this tactless remark by Sammy causes your Lady D. to jump right up and exclaim: 'Bernard,' she exclaims (Bernard's her ever-lovin'), 'Bernard, we've been misled. This is no literary luncheon. In fact,' she says, 'many of the characters here seem very highly illiterate indeed.' Whereupon she places a kiss or two on our Billy and blows it."

SMOG OVER HOLLYWOOD

NEW STARS ARE AS RARE AS A SIGN OF THE OLD SUN

Hollywood, Tuesday. THE film industry went to Hollywood because of the weather. Here were the blue skies and the clear air, the bright sunshine, the Pacific Ocean and the mountains.

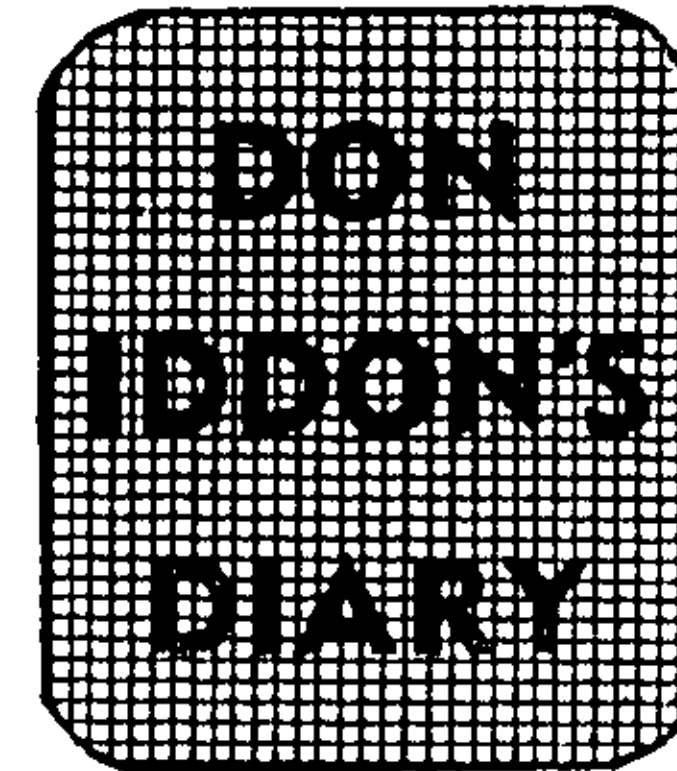

The Pacific Ocean and the mountains are still here, but the blue skies and the bright sunshine and the clear air have departed—at least for much of the time.

I left Vegas in brilliant weather, and we flew low over the chocolate-coloured mountains towards Los Angeles. I could see the desert and the hills with almost dazzling clarity for about three-quarters of an hour.

Choked up

SUDDENLY the blue sky became grey with clouds, the air outside looked thick and woolly, the scene below vanished. We landed at International Airport in what was not actually a London fog but a fair Californian replica.

While I was waiting for my luggage I began to cough and splutter. My eyes felt heavy and smarted, my nose congested.

A Press agent who had met me, and who drove me to the Beverly Hilton Hotel, said: "You are not conditioned to smog yet. After a little while, say three months or so, your body builds up resistance." He laughed, and added: "I feel tired out, run down and choked up only half the time."

I noticed in the hotel that anti-smog ointment and anti-smog glasses were on sale. Smog is Los Angeles' greatest problem, and therefore Hollywood's. Despite all the swank and riches of Beverly Hills, Hollywood is still a Los Angeles suburb.

This is my seventh visit to the film capital in the past three years, and I spent two months here last year. (In Deborah Kerr's lovely house on Pacific Palisades).

Smog had not penetrated Beverly Hills or Pacific Palisades then, but there was an ominous aggressive overcast in the mornings which usually lifted around eleven-thirty.

Today smog has invaded Hollywood proper and a walk down the miracle mile in Wilshire Boulevard has me coughing and sneezing.

It is a mistake to walk in Beverly Hills, and few people do. I walked from the Beverly Hilton Hotel, which is new, glossy, and the most luxurious in the world, to the "old" opulent Beverly Hills Hotel. There is natural confusion over the Beverly Hilton and the Beverly Hills, and there was fierce opposition to Conrad Hilton calling his hotel the Beverly Hilton but Conrad won.

No walking

ANYWAY, as I walked past the beautiful houses the children playing in the gardens stared in astonishment. I said to one little girl: "Have you never seen anyone walking round here before?"

And she said simply: "No." Police cars patrol the Beverly Hills area every ten minutes, and all people seen on the streets after ten o'clock at night are stopped and asked: "If they are residents, and if not, to kindly walk somewhere else."

By the time I got to Sunset Boulevard the police car seemed to be trailing me, but I escaped without being stopped and without any further signs of hostility. Perhaps it's the smog that has made people here rather suspicious of strangers.

The first man I saw in the Beverly Hilton bar, by one of those extraordinary coincidences of life, was Fred Feldkamp, independent film producer, who happened to have the seat next to me on a February flight from London to New York this year.

Fred and I talked most of the journey and shared a bottle of milk (that was all we could get) at the airport in Iceland. Feldkamp in Hollywood looks more worried than Feldkamp in Iceland.

He said: "I've been stuck in Hollywood ten days trying to sign up new names—the public is getting awfully tired of the old ones—and I have come up against the agents."

"Do you know who the most powerful people in Hollywood are today? The agents. They are the elite, the bosses. There is such a dearth of talent and new red blood that they have the whip hand, and the whip is never out of their hands."

"I came up against platoons of agents when I tried to sign up Alec Guinness in England and here. Now I am after a young property in Rod Seiger. The agents are blocking me again."

"Why are people so difficult here? It must be the smog. You know, I almost felt better at Guadalcanal. I was in the Marines."

Tiger to tame

WHAT are Hollywood and Los Angeles doing about the smog which threatens them? Plenty.

Los Angeles is the world's most spread-out city—there are more than 4,000 square miles in the county and the city limits themselves cover 444 square miles. So it's a difficult tiger to tame.

It is a city on wheels. Every one out of two people, and the Los Angeles population is 5,500,000, runs a car.

It has been a fight between city and motor for years and it hasn't been decided yet. Carbon dioxide fumes pour out of automobile exhaust pipes. Oil refineries belch bad air, and Los Angeles, situated in a big bowl, sucks in the pollution.

City officials have hired hundreds of experts and spent $100,000,000 to beat the smog. They are willing to spend $100,000,000 more. In fact, they are willing to spend $300,000,000 more and the latest plan is to build a concrete air sewer to carry smog to the mountains.

What does Norris Peulon, the Mayor of Los Angeles, say?

"I don't think smog will ever be eliminated completely, because of our climate conditions and what is called 'temperature inversion.' The key is most often as clear here as anywhere in the U.S. or anywhere in the world. Then there are days when we have this smoky overcast. We are fighting the smog with everything we've got."

On location

HOLLYWOOD is doing the same. Some studios are willing to put as little as five percent of their profits to beat the smog, and five percent is a high percentage in Hollywood, though not of course as high as the one the agents take.

Today the movie capital is making many of its pictures on location. In Arizona (where conditions are high) and in California (where conditions are low) the agents are fighting the smog with everything we've got.

GENERAL ARAB, MAN OF HATE, MENACES VITAL TALKS TO KEEP THE OIL FLOWING

From John Redfern

DAMASCUS. SYRIAN Ministers and top-ranking British oilmen are meeting here for critical talks about the pipelines that carry 25,000,000 tons of oil a year across Syria from the Iraq wells to the Mediterranean ports of Tripoli and Banias. There is good will on both sides. BUT—

Across the talks falls the shadow of one Khaled Bagdash—called "General Arab"—and rated Moscow's No. 1 man in the Middle East.

Never heard of him? Don't worry. You will—although a couple of years ago he was just a Kurd on the run. He is a Kurd, a Kurd of the Kurds, who last year became the first Communist M.P. in the Arab world.

THE SWAGGER

Bagdash, a well-dressed, six-footer with swaggering good looks, has spent three or four years in the Holy City itself—Moscow.

A lot of people here feel that the fate of an agreement wanted by both sides depends on his say or no say. In the Arab world, the Kurds are the most powerful group. Bagdash is a Kurd of the Kurds.

cause of the pro-Red trend in Syria. "Cancel the concession!" is the cry of the crowd he has whipped up.

The talks are concerned with how much the Iraq Petroleum Company (predominantly British) should pay the Syrians for the pipes that pass through their country from Iraq. In Iraq profits are shared on a fifty-fifty basis, which will mean this year about $72,000,000 to Iraq, most of it earmarked for development purposes.

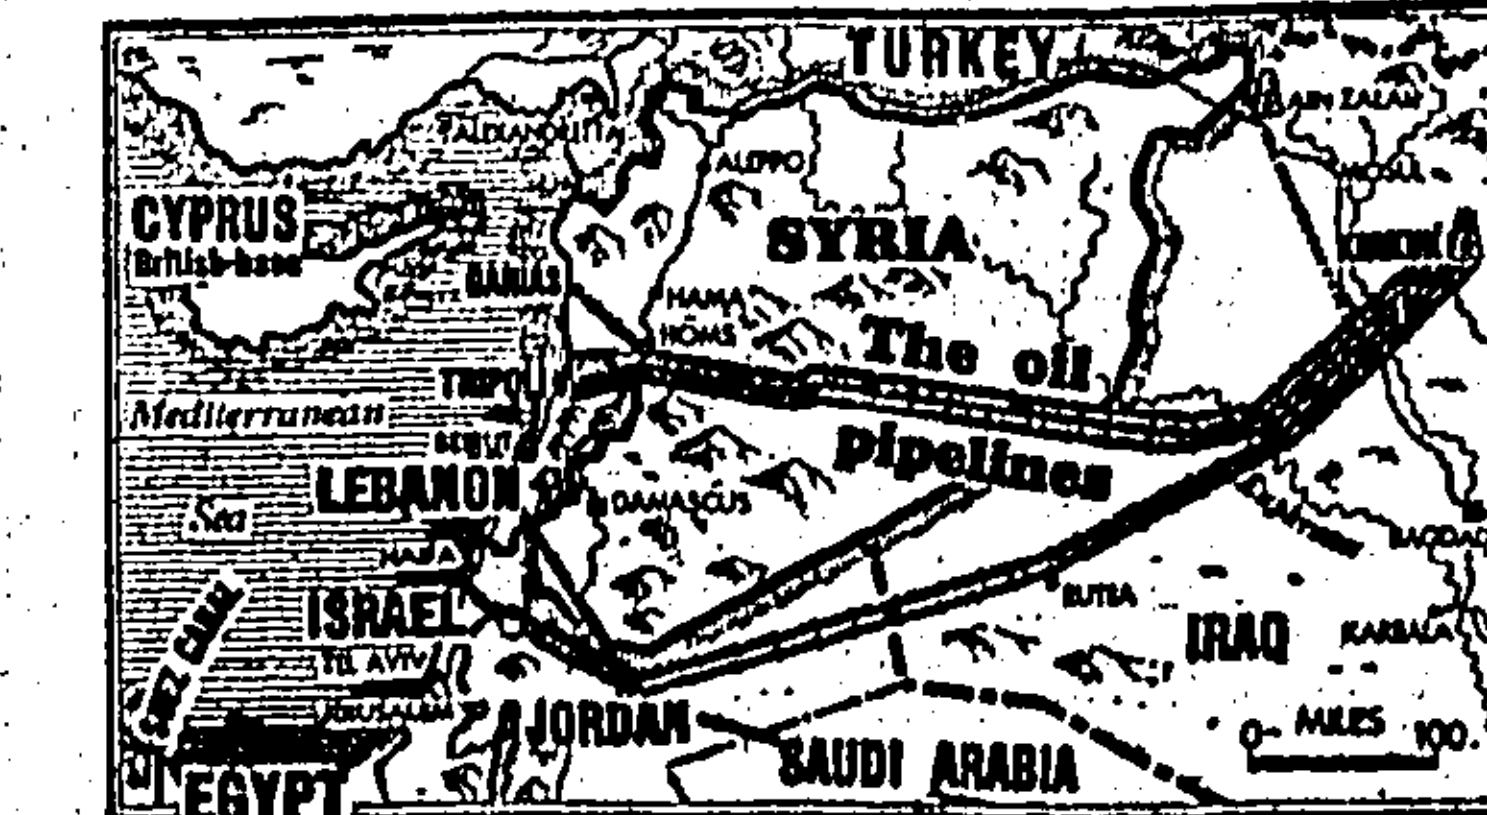

THE CLAIM

Looking hungrily at so much money, the Syrians claim that their transit payment from I.P.C. works out at only about £500,000 a year. They want a bumper increase.

Someone has pretended to work out what the oil men are supposed to save by using the overland route instead of tankers through the Persian Gulf.

He has printed the glad tidings for Syrians—£18,000,000 a year or else.

Or else, remember Abadan? That last started when Moslems, then Persian Premier, put the squeeze on Britain's oil. In 1951, in the Gulf, Britain was forced to pay $100 million to Iran for the right to use the Persian Gulf.

Parliamentary Standing Committee which will consider any pipeline proposals.

He calls the company "a bunch of imperialists" and supports the "People's Committee" formed to fan up Syrian feeling about oil.

Each fresh bale of leaflets, each new wave of propaganda makes the not-over-stable coalition Government look over its shoulder to the old house in the Damascus Kurdish quarter where Khaled Bagdash studies Communist techniques and plots to fan up Syrian feeling about oil.

Then I was told that this man Bagdash, on my way to visit the main oil pipeline, was a Kurd of the Kurds. He was a Kurd of the Kurds.

Costello in "The Invisible Man." It was an omen.

I drove through the narrow, ill-lit streets in which it is impossible for two cars to pass. My driver said in Arabic that the equivalent of "You'll be lucky" was "I told him whom I wanted to see."

The house was down a slope near a stream. Near it was a police sentry-box, but Bagdash had his own guard on the door. The door in the wall was open, and I could see a pleasant courtyard. From the shadows a man said: "Bagdash was not in. The door was closed. I was told that this man Bagdash, on my way to visit the main oil pipeline, was a Kurd of the Kurds. He was a Kurd of the Kurds."

Then I was told that this man Bagdash, on my way to visit the main oil pipeline, was a Kurd of the Kurds. He was a Kurd of the Kurds.

DOLLERY MADE HONORARY
LIFE MEMBER OF COUNTY
CRICKET CLUB

By "ALL-ROUNDER"

H.E. ("Tom") Dollery, who was the first professional to be appointed captain of a County cricket club and who retired at the end of last season, has been made an honorary life member of the Warwickshire County Cricket Club.

Tom, who was appointed coach a short time ago, thus joins a small group to have received the honour, the others being Capt. C. F. R. Cowan, F. R. Foster, C. A. F. Hastlow, J. Santall, E. J. Smith and Dr H. Thwaites.

The County cricket authorities have also announced that R.T. Spooner, the County and England wicket-keeper batsman, who joined the staff in 1948, will get a benefit in 1957, and F.C. Gardner, who has opened the batting order ever since making his first appearance in 1947, will have his benefit in 1959.

Three new players have been added to the County's playing staff. They are: H.E. Fletcher (20 years of age), a left-handed batsman, C.G. Hawkins (17), a wicket-keeper and right-hand batsman who is also a splendid outfielder, and 24-year-old S.S. Griffiths, a right-arm fast bowler.

Fletcher played for the County in Minor Counties matches last season, and finished second in the batting order. He was also a member of the England team at Edgbaston. Hawkins, a Buckinghamshire lad, was on the Lord's ground staff until a year ago. Griffiths is a West Indian who came from Barbados in June. The authorities also hope to secure a promising left-hand all-rounder from the North Country.

RECONSTRUCTION

As a result of the reconstruction of the West (Old) Stand at Edgbaston, the County's headquarters, will be increased by 3,200, with a total of 16,850 seating places. The ground will then hold 50,300.

The reconstruction work will be completed in time for the official opening on December 31 when an Inter-County XV will meet a combined England-Wales side. This is the first fixture of this kind in the last 32 years. In 1923 England and Wales beat Scotland and Ireland 21-16 in the century match at Rugby School, and in 1929, to mark the unveiling of the Twickenham memorial to Sir G. Rowland Hill, Scotland-Ireland won 20-13.

Scottish B Division Club Berwick Rangers recently took a trip to Austria to play a match in Vienna. The game did not materialise, but the "Inter-Sport Vienna" authorities have countered with a much more far-reaching proposal which could develop into a close season six-weeks Continental tour. They would like to organise fifteen "International friendship" matches for Berwick, in Austria, Germany and France between May 1 and June 15.

The Austrian authorities are also anxious to arrange for fifteen matches to be played between December 15 and February 15 in the United Kingdom. It has been reported that the Austrian clubs and English and Scottish League First, Second and Third Division clubs. East Fife have already accepted to stage one game at Bayview under floodlights on December 19, and Berwick Rangers will entertain the S. K. Sturm Graz club at Sheffield on Boxing Day.

Chif Morgan, the brilliant Cardiff and Wales outside half, who made such a hit during the British Lions' recent tour of South Africa, is reported to be considering offers to become a Rugby League professional. The sum of £8,000 has been mentioned. Morgan is 25, has good employment in Cardiff and is shortly to marry in Irish girl.

Mitchell Plate
First Round
Draw

The Qualifying Round for the Mitchell Plate was played at Fanning on Tuesday, the sixteen lowest Net Scores. Qualifying for the first round, to be played on or before Tuesday, December 13.

The following is the draw for this round:

1st round—Mrs S. M. Buckle—Mrs J. C. Hurden; Mrs D. Miao—Mrs J. H. McCann; Mrs J. A. H. Saunders—Mrs B. Brooker; Mrs F. C. Black—Mrs W. P. Birtwhistle; Mrs J. D. Clague—Mrs L. Goldman; Mrs H. D. Neale—Mrs J. R. Greig; Mrs G. W. Vaughan—Mrs R. H. Coombe; Mrs H. D. Frazer—Mrs L. H. Robinson.

Second round to be played on or before Friday, December 30; Semi-finals on Saturday, January 14, and the final before Friday, January 20.

MALAYANS LEAVE

The Malayan Cricket Association team, which wound up a successful tour in the Colony recently, left for Singapore by Ceylon Pacific Airways yesterday.

The 17-member team, led by Mr H. F. Shepherd, won three out of four matches here, including the three-day Interport.

SOCCER ON THE INSIDE

Edited By Sam Leitch

Cardiff's nation-wide search for a wing-half received another jolt last week when Dundee directors rejected as "too small" the Welsh club's £10,000 bid for Scottish International left-half Doug Cowie.

Dundee want double that amount. And Cardiff have rivals in Preston and Blackpool.

Newcastle directors emphasise that Tom Casey, another Cardiff target, would not be leaving.

Drizzle these setbacks Cardiff manager Trevor Morris said: "I have not given up hope of getting either Casey or Cowie. We have been working hard to get players, but as soon as it is known that we are making enquiries other clubs become interested and up go the prices."

PROMOTION BID

Latest club to inquire about Wolves transfer-listed inside-forward Doug Taylor is Newcastle.

The Welsh Third Division side has dismissed all ideas of selling players and wants new men for a promotion bid.

Bill Slater, Wolves and England wing-half, will turn his attention to cricket early in 1956.

Bill, a PT lecturer at Birmingham University, is taking Warwickshire pace bowlers Jack Bannister, Roly Thompson, Ray

Carter, and Keith Dollery under his wing at the new indoor school at Edgbaston.

Slater's duty: to put the bowlers through a weekly course of exercises aimed at building up their stamina for next summer.

Scouts from Arsenal, Chelsea, "Spurs" and Fulham watched Army outside-right Len Worley play against Oxford University at Leytonstone last week. Arsenal are favourites for Worley, who is with Wycombe Wanderers.

Bolton have given permission to Ralph Banks, their former left-back who played in the great Matthews Cup Final of 1953, to train with the club again for a fortnight.

Banks left Bolton for Aldershot. He had a dispute with the Third Division side and has now become player-coach to Weymouth.

Banks hopes to have a try-out with Weymouth reserves next week.

Barnsley have beaten Aston Villa, Sheffield United, and Northampton for the signature of Gordon Duggins, 20-year-old centre-forward of Gresley Rovers in the Birmingham League.

DASHING DAVE

Dave Hickson, 24-year-old Aston Villa centre-forward, was transferred to Huddersfield Town last week... just 82 days after he joined Villa from Everton.

In that time dashing Dave played in 12 games, and scored only one goal. He was dropped.

So when Huddersfield Town boss Andy Beattie looked in at Villa Park he found manager Eric Houghton ready to part with the man who cost him £22,000 on September 2.

Hickson was ready to try his luck elsewhere. Beattie rates him the man to stop a run of seven consecutive defeats and a scoring slump of less than a goal a game this season.

And Villa are happy with most of that £22,000 back in their bank balance.

Doug Rudham dropped. That's a shock for Liverpool fans and the South African goalkeeper who has had a run of 27 consecutive matches with the Division II side.

Liverpool say Dave Underwood, who has not played in the first team for 14 months, has been playing so well in the reserves that he has earned this opportunity.

UP THE VALE
IS USEFUL
FOUR-YEAR-OLD

By JAMES PARK

London.

The form book is the best guide to racing. That has always been my basic rule. It can be supplemented at times by close observation on the racecourse, but that is outside the scope of the average stay-at-home backer.

The proved practitioner can be weighed up with a certain amount of accuracy by those who have the time to study the form book.

In the early part of the season it is the novice who can get him guessing. The form is not always what it seems.

Many of the horses have run on the flat. Forget about that. It does not matter what form a horse has under Jockey Club Rules if he cannot jump.

Not every horse can be taught to pop over hurdles or stand back and measure fences. There is a knack in it and under N.H. Rules I make jumping my first essential. Other qualities are involved, but sound jumping ability is of first importance.

NOVICE RACES

There were novice races at Sandown and the few hints I picked up might be useful to those who could not be present.

The light was not so good on Saturday as on Friday, but it was possible to get a view of most of the obstacles.

Bryan Marshall is that combination of horseman and race rider that is a joy to watch. Some people may think that horsemanship and race riding are one and the same thing, but nothing could be further from the truth.

To master the art of race riding one has to be a good judge of pace, know when to start a run and be capable of sitting down to ride a finish which will get the best out of a tiring horse.

Marshall gave a perfect example of judgment of pace when he won on Up the Vale. He dropped his mount out, moved into a better position round the bottom turn, but did not really get to work until between the last two hurdles.

Then it was all over. This is a useful four-year-old, well built and with every prospect of making steady improvement.

Crown Lands was the only one who ever looked like making a light of it. He went along in the lead and took the hurdles in his stride. One would not have thought it was his first race over obstacles. He lost his action once the winner got to him and, though Crown Lands will win when the company is not too good, I doubt whether he will go far.

King's Scholarship lacks speed and will be better when he has had sufficient experience to justify him running over three miles. Fair Hearing is tall and a "bit up in the air." He is not broad to stay, but jumps well. He will win a small race.

The race Up the Vale won was run in two Divisions. In the other Division the winner was Friarspark, but I do not think he would have given Up the Vale any trouble. I was not impressed with any of those who ran behind Friarspark.

More useful for the purpose of finding a winner or two for the future may have been the race for three-year-olds. I thought Rocko was a bit soft-hearted on the flat, but full marks must be given to him for his brave and successful effort to redeem what once looked rather a hopeless case.

DISAPPOINTING

Shotgun Weiding was also disappointing on the flat, but there is no doubt Ron Smyth will get a race out of him. Among the unplaced division two to be noted are Lo Spero and Open Goal.

As Lo Spero finished fourth, form students will be able to weigh him up for themselves. I noted him making a magnificent leap at one of the hurdles on the far side. That is what I like to see. All he has to do is to perform the feat more often.

Open Goal finished in the ruck, but that was not surprising. He completely bungled a jump at about half-way which sent him right back. I thought that would cause him to lose confidence, but he took the next so well that I am sure all he wants is a bit more experience.

Tito Entering Middle East Scene

CAN YUGOSLAVIA EASE ISRAELI, ARAB TENSION?

Belgrade, Nov. 30.

President Tito's visit to Egypt and Ethiopia will, in the opinion of diplomatic observers here, spotlight the appearance on the Middle Eastern scene of Yugoslavia, whose active interests before World War II were limited to the Balkans.

The question uppermost in many minds here is to what extent President Tito will use Yugoslavia's new prestige in the Middle East to try to ease tension between Egypt and Israel.

While Yugoslavia would probably reject the description of mediator, it would be in line with her foreign policy of active co-existence at least to explore with Cairo the possibilities of a settlement. For she is in the fortunate position of not being suspect like a Great Power and of having friendly relations with both Egypt and Israel.

She felt particular friendship for Israel after the young state's foundation, and many Yugoslav leaders today look with sympathetic interest on Israel's development of agricultural co-operatives and her striving to become a socialist state, though later contacts between the two countries have been less lively.

More Recent

Yugoslavia's friendship with Egypt is more recent, having grown up since the deposition of King Farouk and since President Tito and the Egyptian Prime Minister, Nasser, met briefly on the Suez Canal a year ago. At that meeting, the two men developed a personal liking for each other.

In preparatory talks in November, Yugoslavia was able to ascertain the views on the Middle East of the United States and Britain, when President Tito met Mr. John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State, on his visit to London. Before President Tito's departure, Mr. Koca Popovic, the Foreign Secretary, made it clear, in a review of foreign policy to the Yugoslav Parliament, that Yugoslavia does not plan Egypt for buying Czechoslovak arms. Rather, he indicated, the source of trouble in the Middle East is due to efforts being made to induce countries there to enter military arrangements of a bloc character.

Warmer Relations

This statement was generally taken to be a criticism of Britain's sponsorship of the Baghdad Pact.

Yugoslavia is seen here as paradoxically having warmer relations with Egypt, to whom she is bound by no treaty, than with Turkey, her partner in the Balkan Alliance, who is one of the founder members of the Baghdad Pact.

While in Cairo, President Tito will be able to obtain first hand information on Egyptian policy towards the Sudan. Yugoslavia is for the first time having to take an active interest in that country because she has accepted an invitation to be one of the seven members of the Neutral Commission for the Sudan.

The visit to Ethiopia is regarded here as of more symbolic than immediate political interest.

Token of Friendship

The Emperor Haile Selassie is admired as a man who fought against the common foe of Italian fascism, and who is striving to develop his country as a modern independent state.

President Tito will be returning a visit by the Emperor, who came here in summer 1954 and was the first Royal visitor to Yugoslavia.

In token of the friendship felt for Ethiopia, Yugoslavia has built in the city of Addis Ababa a royal yacht, named "Brioni", as a gift for the Emperor.

This ship will also be the first unit of an Ethiopian navy. Young Ethiopian army officers have been training in Yugoslavia this winter to man it. When they sail the Brioni to her new home, they will change their khaki for naval uniform.

With Ethiopia, as with Middle East countries, Yugoslavia is trying to increase her trade, particularly with the aim of finding a market for products of her post-war industries. A mixed Yugoslav-Ethiopian trading company has been formed in Addis Ababa.

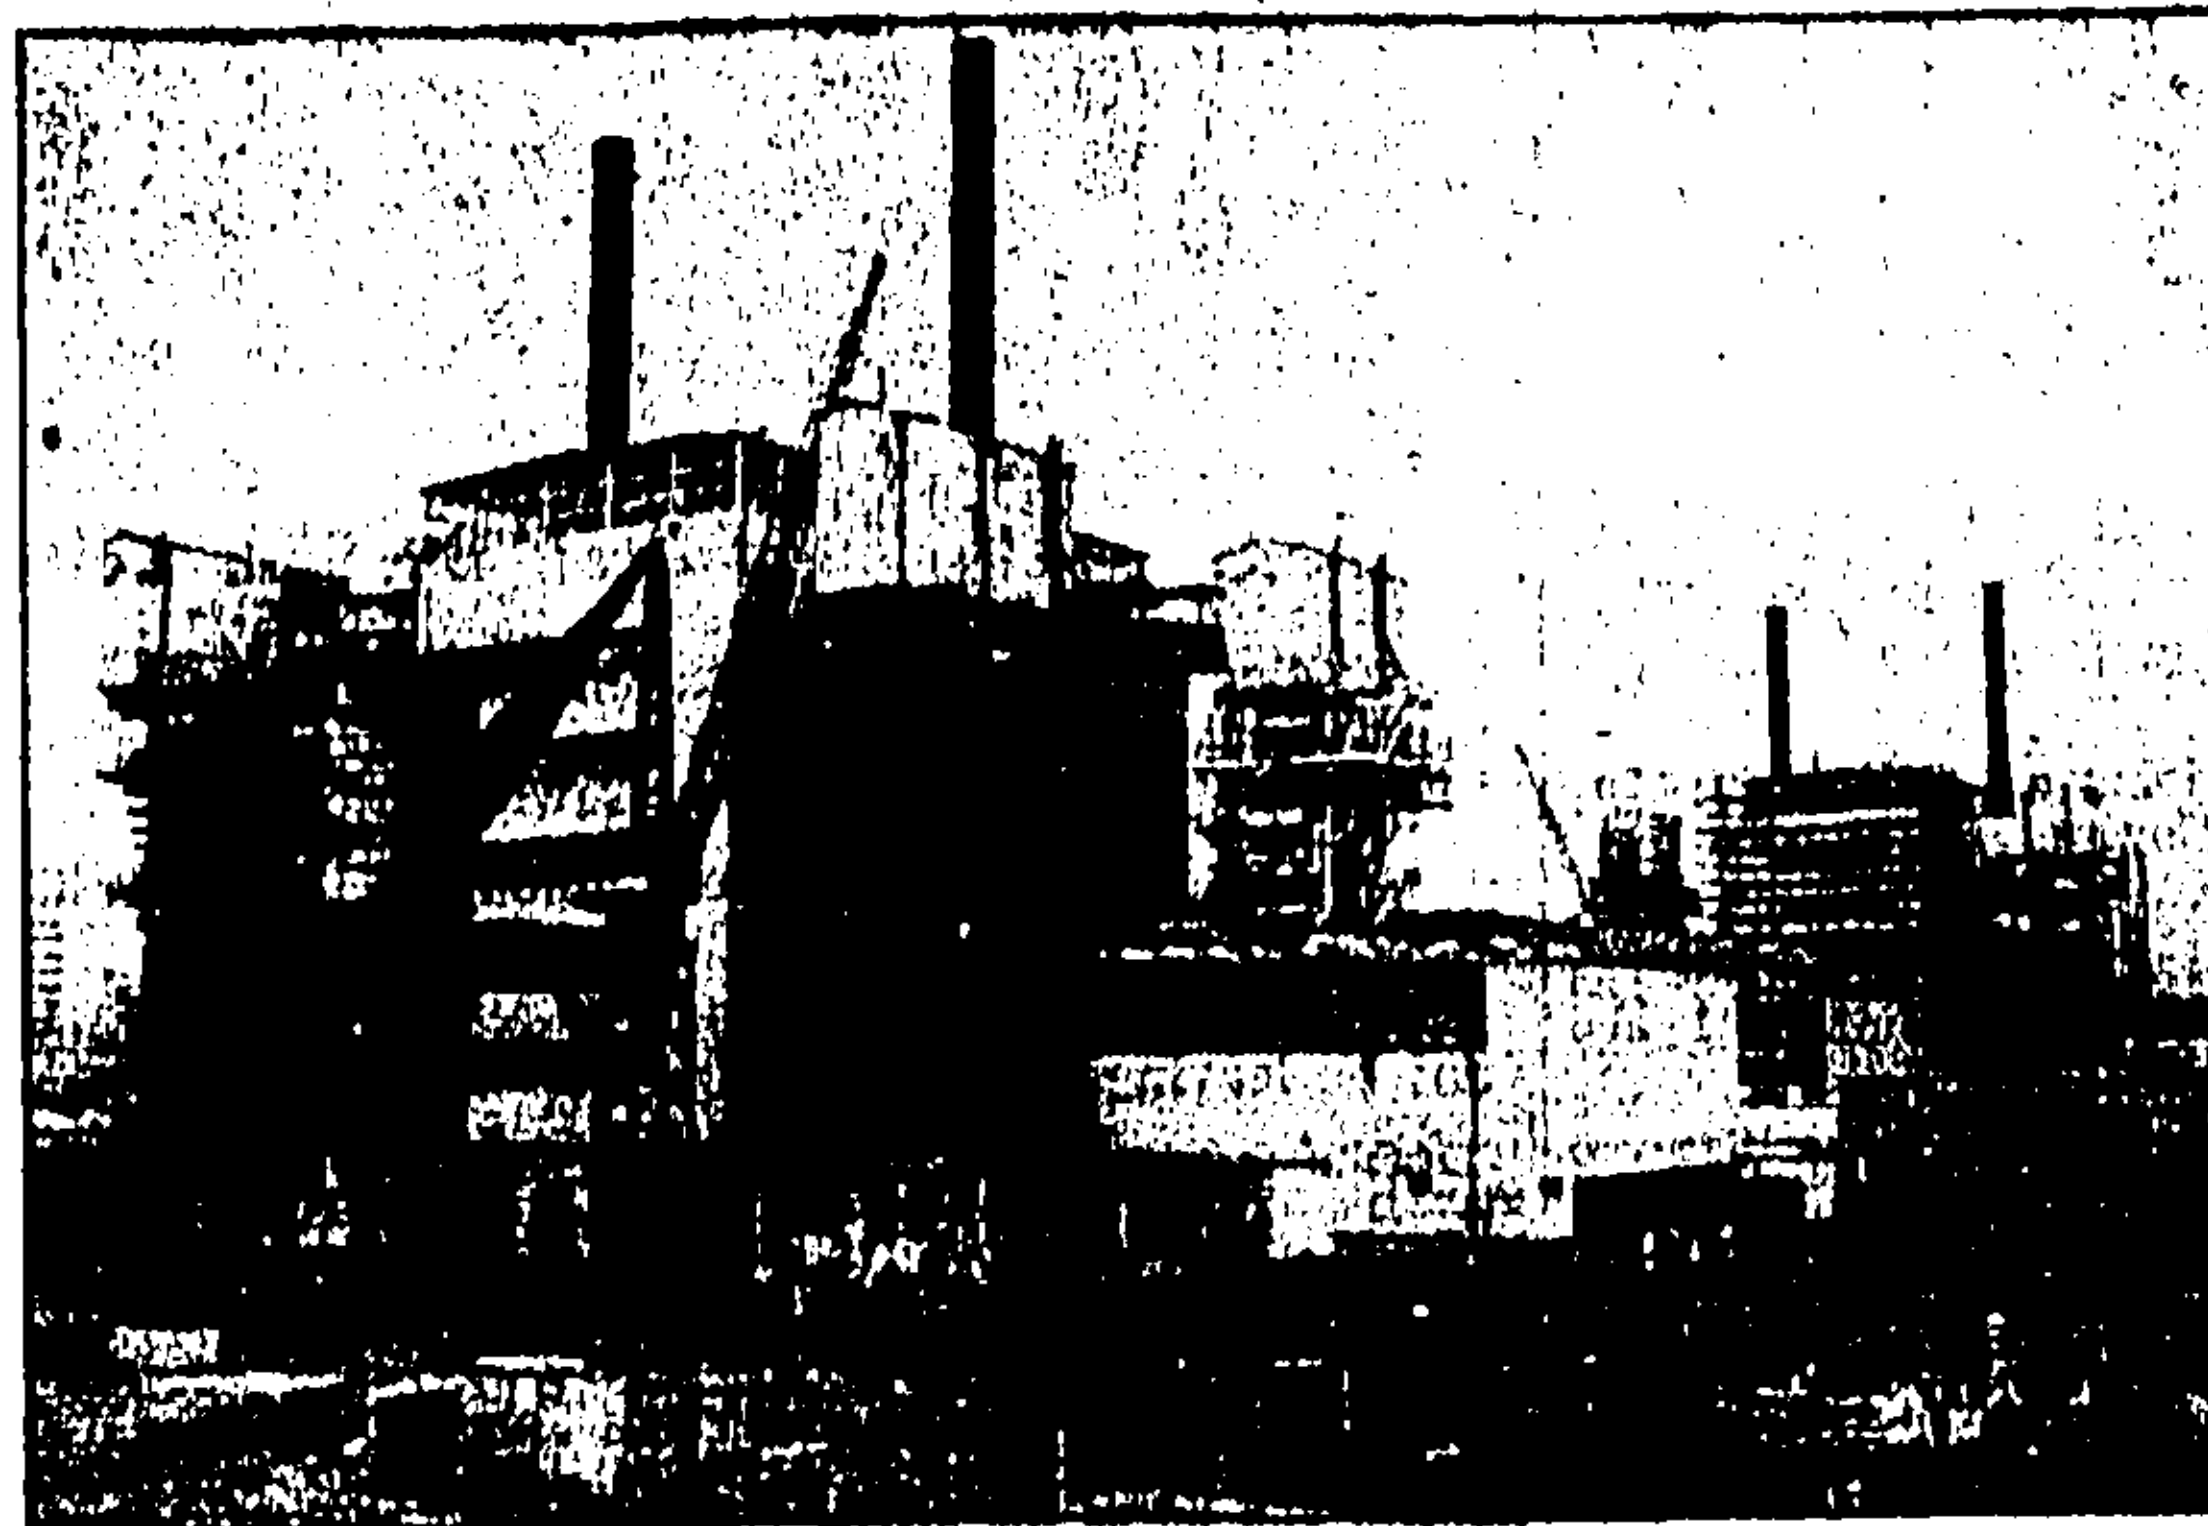

Looks Fit

In November, a Yugoslav economic delegation under Mr. Osmar Karabegovic, member of the Federal Executive Council (Government), preceded President Tito to Egypt, to arrange an expansion of trade with that country. Yugoslav experts are also helping Egypt to establish a fishing fleet and fish preserving industry in the Red Sea.

At one time it was thought that President Tito would have to postpone his visit, as he was reported early in October to be suffering from a rheumatic complaint. But he looked fit and in good health when leaving Belgrade five weeks later.

It will be the President's sixth official foreign visit. He has been to Britain, Greece, Turkey, India, and Burma, and is due to go to France and the Soviet Union next year.—China Mail Special.

Students Fight With Police

Havana, Nov. 30.

The police fired tommy guns in the air today to break up a student mob when anti-government disorders spread from the East Cuban city of Santiago to the University and high schools here.

A policeman guarding the University grounds was mobbed and disarmed by students. A University student leader, Jose Echevarria, and a number of other youthful agitators were arrested when police caught them trying to stir up trouble at one of Havana's high schools.

Two bombs, apparently thrown by student terrorists, caused considerable damage but no casualties in Santiago early today.—United Press.

SHIP RUNS AGROUND

Manila, Dec. 1.

A foreign vessel, identified as the D. J. Antagora, ran aground off Lingayen, 100 miles northwest of Manila, reports reaching here said tonight.

The vessel, whose nationality was not known, was believed to have been forced seaward and stranded by choppy seas.

The Civil Aeronautics Administration, which operates a rescue co-ordinating centre, received a message which indicated the foreign vessel was apparently in immediate danger of sinking because of continual buffeting by strong gales.

(Lloyd's register does not list a D. J. Antagora).—United Press

NAUTILUS STILL GOING STRONG

Washington, Nov. 30.

The American Navy's atomic-powered submarine Nautilus has already covered more than 25,000 nautical miles without yet using up all its atomic fuel. Experts say that it will still have a long way to go before it does.

A similar atomic motor in the Atomic Energy Commission's laboratories in Idaho has just recently exhausted its atomic fuel after two and a half years. Scientists said the consumption of uranium 235 by these atomic motors must also depend on the submarine's speed.—France-Press.

Failure To Locate Tomb Of Caiaphas

Athens, Nov. 30.

Cretan peasants living close to the 4,000 years old Palace of King Minos, at Knossos, on the island of Crete, insist that Caiaphas, the Jewish High Priest who condemned Jesus Christ to death by crucifixion, died and was buried there.

The legend is reported by travellers who visited Knossos many centuries ago and is still current.

Mr Sinclair Hood, Director of the British School of Archaeology in Athens, who has been conducting excavations of ancient graveyards near Knossos this autumn, heard of it and made some investigations—without result.

Procopius, a medieval traveller who wrote a book on Knossos stated that about a quarter of a mile to the west of the town there was a building near the road which seemed to have been an ancient sepulchre.

which no trace can now be found.

It will probably, therefore, never be ascertained whether Caiaphas actually died and was buried in Knossos.

Procopius himself, who gave the first eyewitness account of the existence of the sepulchre, doubted whether Caiaphas had been buried there.

"This story," he wrote, "shows that the people of Crete have now as great a genius for inventing and spreading fables as they had in pagan times."

Out 7 Times

"The walls of the building," he wrote, "are six feet thick and paved with brick inside and out. It is ten feet square within. People say that it is the tomb of Caiaphas and the most modest account which they give of it is that he landed at this place where he died and was buried, that his body, being found above ground, was buried seven times. Then at last they built this strong fabric over it, which, they say, prevented it from rising again."

When Mr Hood visited the spot mentioned by Procopius, however, no sign of the tomb of Caiaphas could be found. But old peasants living in the area told him that they well remembered the sepulchre. "It was destroyed," they explained, "80 years ago when a road was built over it."

They also told Mr Hood that according to a tradition handed down from father to son, Caiaphas and Pontius Pilate both were shipwrecked on the Cretan coast outside Knossos, while on their way to report to the Emperor in Rome on the trial of Jesus Christ.

Caiaphas died there, the Knossian peasants assert, and was buried in the sepulchre of

This year's work by the British Archaeological School was not, however, confined to the investigation of legends. Diggings in three ancient graveyards near Knossos produced finds which shed more light on life and customs in ancient days.

Two Tombs

Two tombs situated opposite the Palace of King Minos were cleared this summer. They seemed to have been used during the Middle Minoan period (about 1,700-1,800 BC) and contained a single pithos (burial urn) and some 18 clay coffins, mostly oval in shape, with lids.

One of the coffins is painted red and elaborately decorated with bands of running spirals and leafy sprays in white, with some crimson.

Charred bones on the top level of one of the tombs appear to represent the remains of one or more cremation burials. British archaeologists believe that this may be, by some centuries, the earliest example of cremation yet found in the Aegean area.

Other finds from both these tombs included seven seals, one in ivory and one in soft steatite stone, a fragment of gold with a leafy branch in repousse, gold sequins and gold leaf, bronze pins and earrings and beads.

Excavations conducted in a field about ten minutes' walk from the Minoan city brought to light 18 tombs, mostly of the chamber type, from which some 40 vases were recovered. Five were identified as dating back to the early 1,400 BC "The vases," Mr Hood commented, "are exceptionally fine."

Four Seals

They include a jug with a stylized arched and fish design, and an elaborate spiral frieze decoration on a stirrup vase.

Bronzes from the tombs included a mirror, several knives and razors, an iron knife with bronze hilt and some large bronze pins.

Archaeologists believe that four seals found in the graves were worn as amulets rather than as signet rings. Three are almond shaped and of good workmanship, one is in black haematite and two are cornelian, engraved respectively with a butterfly, a flying fish and a papyrus design.

Such iron amulets are still worn by Cretan women today for luck when they are pregnant or ill, and to avert the "evil eye" of their enemies.

Other finds include: earrings and finger rings of bronze and silver, a figure of eight shield amulet, and heart- and bracelet-shaped ornaments of glass paste, together with beads of glass, china, gold, crystal, cornelian and amber.

Several of the bodies in these tombs were evidently buried sitting upright in a squabbling position with their backs to the wall. With one of them a pair of silver earrings was found and a small lentoid seal in hammered silver in fine condition engraved with a Cretan wild goat.

Diggings conducted in a Roman cemetery in the area produced proof of the survival of pagan customs in the Christian era.

Stone Receptacle

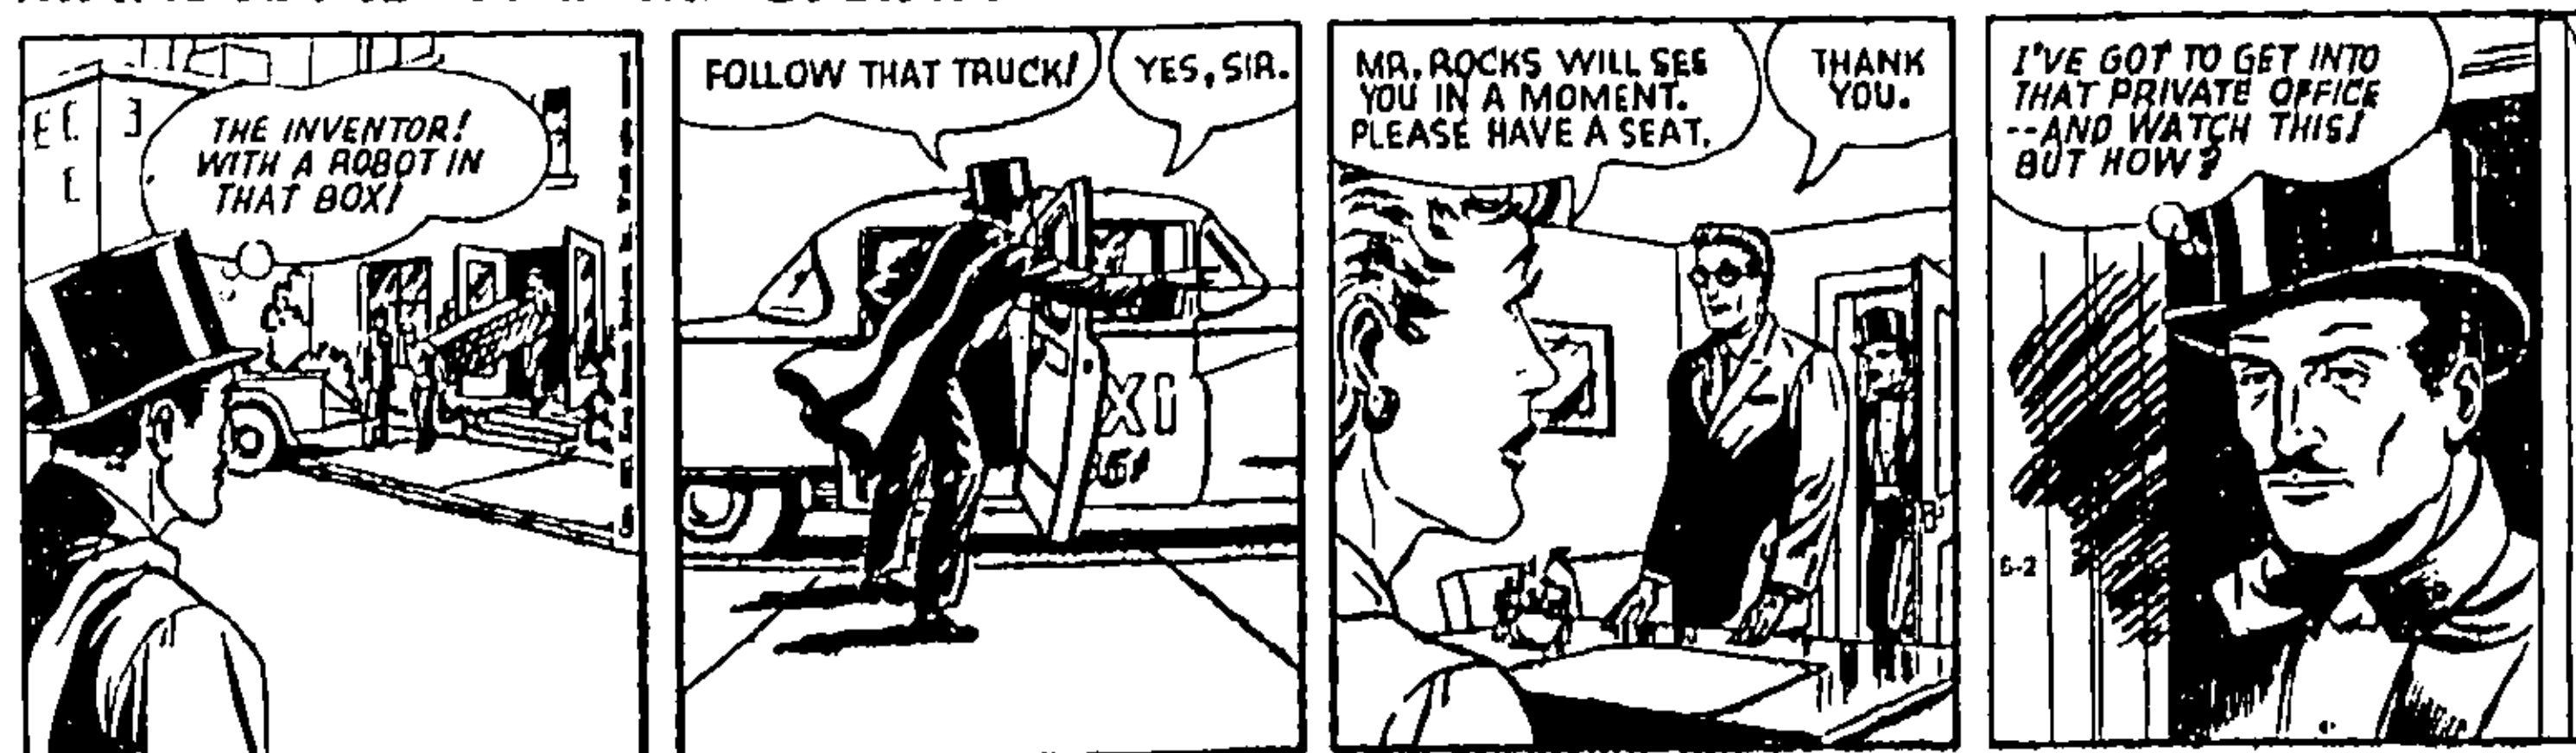

The British archaeologists found in this cemetery a tomb preserved intact in a corner of a room of a building in ruins. It has sides faced with slabs of coloured marble and the top was decorated with a mosaic of smaller marble slabs.

In the top of the tomb is a stone receptacle with a hole leading down into the grave for libations.

Evidence of similar survivals of pagan customs into Christian times is the archaic mosaic found in a tomb in the same cemetery. It depicts a figure, possibly a saint, seated on a throne, with a cross above his head.

CASEBOOK

The Way Back

ALAN lived in one of these squares in Earl's Court where nearly all the houses make bed-sitting homes for a score or more of people, strangers to each other.

Such squares and such houses are full of eager young people come to take a lift at London; of old, lonely people whose worlds and hopes have shrunk; and there are a few solitary like Alan working out their salvation in their own way after making a false start in life.

Alan is a lean, tall man of 30, who first brought trouble upon himself when he was 14.

ON HIS OWN AGAIN
A juvenile court bound him over for stealing money and a motorcycle.

He was bound over again by a juvenile court two years later for five cases of theft.

For some years after that, Alan went straight in his twenties, he married, and had things gone well with his marriage it is possible the police would have heard no more of him.

But his marriage broke up, and a court ordered him to pay his wife £1 a week towards the upkeep of their child.

On his own again, Alan drifted back into crime. He went to prison for three months for stealing an electric motor valued at £10.

He was out of prison for twice as long for stealing brass fittings from a railway compartment.

NO QUESTIONS
ON the May day two years ago, when he was freed from that sentence, Alan decided to put crime behind him for good.

He got a £10-a-week job as a shop assistant in a Kensington store. He moved into the Earl's Court bed-sitting room, hopeful that the well-bred refinement of his fellow-tenants would triumph over their curiosity about his past.

All went well with Alan until last Christmas, then, when the store was at its busiest, Alan threw up his job.

NEIGHBOURS
HE became a sales representative, working first for a company then, more peripatetically, as a free-lance, paid commission only on the sales he managed to bring in.

His earnings, slid down from an average £10 a week to an average £7.

One day at his lodgings a neighbour, a girl, told Alan of trouble she was having with a reading lamp. "I'll fix it some time," Alan said.

One evening when the girl was out he fixed the reading lamp. He also stole a cheque book that he found lying in the girl's room.

Alan used one of the girl's cheques to buy a sewing machine, which he sold the same day for £12. With another cheque he bought himself a suit for 20 guineas.

TRAGEDY
AFTER that he changed his lodgings, moving to Bayswater. He was living there, when the police called.

Soviet Preliminary
Disarmament
Agreement Proposal

United Nations, Nov. 30.
The Soviet Union today proposed a preliminary disarmament agreement aimed at cutting the armed forces of the Big-Four powers and Communist China.

Speaking at a meeting of the United Nations Political Commission, Soviet delegate Vassili Kuznetsov, said his plan would include points on which the East and West have reached agreement or near-agreement.

The Soviet plan called for armed strength to be cut in conformity with the Western proposal which was accepted by the Soviet Union on May 10.

The West's proposal aimed at reducing to one and a half million men the armed forces of the Soviet Union, the United States and Communist China. Under the plan, Britain and France would reduce their armed might to 650,000 men.

The Soviet plan also called for countries which possess atom weapons to pledge that they would not use them except as retaliation against atomic attack.

HOPE TO MILLIONS
Kuznetsov said his proposal would give hope to millions of people by showing that disarmament is workable, and that steps are being taken to achieve it.

Kuznetsov said the United States abandoned all "real" disarmament when they saw the Soviet Union's attitude made agreement possible on disarmament.

He said Britain and France fell in line with the Big-Four foreign ministers conference which ended in Geneva this month.

Kuznetsov said disarmament was necessary to slacken international tension. But he said that members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation had boosted their military expenditures from 18,500 million dollars in 1949 to 65 milliards in 1953.

Kuznetsov demanded that military bases in foreign countries should be abandoned. He rejected President Eisenhower's plan for reciprocal aerial surveillance which he said, lacked concrete disarmament measures.

LODGE REPLIES
The United States delegate, Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge, reiterated the United States commitment to refrain from using atomic weapons or other weapons except in self-defence.

Lodge said the United States will continue to work toward a well-balanced, controllable disarmament plan covering all weapons.

Another meeting of the Commission is scheduled for tomorrow morning. — France-Press
